A JAPANESE FESTIVAL.

By Mrs. J. W. MURRAY.

"The Japanese have a custom of going to the graves of their friends and visiting them to be present at their funerals."

Came to our festive halls, friends that were dear!
Come where the wine is poured, sparkling and clear;
Come while there's freshness and dew on the spray,
Rise from your turf beds and hasten away.

Haste where are gathering the friends that ye left,
In life's early spring-time, of loved ones bereft;
They're gathering them with unvaried feet,
Ye, ye, the gathered, the cheered, to greet.

But many a bairn since ye passed on it last,
The cold hand of Time endures traced as he passed,
And changed all their tresses of ebon to gray.
Since ye in life's spring-time from Earth passed away.

And dark clouds of sorrow have rested till now,
Over the bright sunny surface of each holly bough;

Where erst there have mingled in glory and pride,
Glad smile which from Earth with your spirits did glide.

But now they're delighted with pleasure once more,

To greet the long absent from happy shore,
So up! ye beloved ones, and hasten away.

Where gather the friends of your life's sunny day.

* * *

They come not—they come not—the absent, the dead
They heard not the words we implored you said;

And still in the grave's dimmest shadows they lie—
Ye will greet them no more save in glory on high.

Ah, parents! ye gave for your children in vain,
Their seats by the broad board will vacant remain;

They'll come not toadden the linings of eye,
For their spirits now revel in glory on high.

The cloud again settles, and low bows each head;

They mourn for the clasped—the beautified dead,
And the last gushes of pleasure has vanished from all,

And a glow is now thrown over our banqueting hall.
